UK Outlook for Monday 24 May 2021 to Wednesday 2 Jun 2021:
Unsettled weather continues through the start of next week, with widespread showers. Persistent rain is also possible at times, particularly in the north and west. As next week progresses there is a chance of more settled conditions to gradually become established. Rain and showers are likely to become confined to the east, leaving drier and less windy conditions for the rest of the country. Temperatures look likely to remain on the cool side, though feeling pleasant in the sunshine. Night temperatures could become chilly, with late season frost in prone spots a possibility. As we move into the following week, things become more uncertain, but indications suggest a continuation of drier weather with the possibility of temperatures starting to increase slightly closer to normal.
